What's new in Close Contact:

Fall had finally arrived and it brought a welcome dose of leaves and autumnal air. I made my way back to the city around the same time that the scavengers were returning from their search for salvage, also known as the P'ton (Petron), excavating the scruffy ruins of the old Razzia quadrant along the way. No surprises there, the streets around near what used to be the dockyards had many treasure caches. Hey, it's a buffet! I took a stroll through the neighborhoods along the canal and made my way to the west gate area, where I found the exciting new obstacle course set up by Barda and the Rat Pack. I put on the radioactive suit and flicked on my powered suit's ankle pressure monitor. After strapping myself into the ATV, I rode out towards the distant horizons. Traps! My first trap was a T-RAM, and as soon as it picked up my pressure sense signal, the trap fired. I didn't care too much about that it seemed like they were only too happy to kill each other, particularly the T-Rams. I continued to follow the unfamiliar path and soon I started on the bridle path, its branches were sreeved with scrawlings such as, "Rat Pack earns its keep!", "Police has no trial!". My helmet visor was also showing videos by ClubBen of late protests and a pig-faced thug made of local stone being chased and beaten by angry locals. After a little detour through a sinkhole, I arrived at the southern gate, crossed the bridge and followed the pathway to the opposite side. I was quickly rewarded with the spacious and equally congested salvage area. Sand! I'm a little odd when it comes to metal and I like to know what I'm dealing with, so I usually wear gloves. In a salvage context, the ability to accept or reject a given metal's quality and potential value is imperative, so I remove my gloves and toss them into a trash bin. In a pit, the Sentinel's sensor beeped like crazy. The alarm had been triggered by a strange glitch, the AI of the T-RAMs was calling out for their handlers, the crusty foreman here was coming into the pit. I'm sure they were able to hear
